

European carriers in talks with US Transport Security Administration

United within the Association of European Airlines (AEA), carriers operating in Europe held two-day talks in Amsterdam on December 4th and 5th with a large delegation of representatives from the Transport Security Administration (TSA).

The themes addressed included new security measures proposed by the US administration that will come into force in the nearby future. In an atmosphere of constructive dialogue, agreements were hammered out to support one another in the future in terms of developing and implementing new and effective security measures. AEA hopes that the seminar will lead to greater cooperation in the future based on harmonization and equality. The ultimate aim of this closer cooperation with US authorities is to provide passengers with friendlier and safer air travel services.
