AEA April traffic figures demonstrate impact of airspace closures

The Association of European Airlines has issued its members' traffic and capacity figures for April and the year-to-date, giving the clearest picture so far of the impact of the volcanic ash crisis and the subsequent airspace closures in the second half of the month.

Passenger traffic for the month was down 13.1% on April 2009, a baseline which itself was depressed as the economic downturn was by then exerting its full impact on the industry. The monthly result for April overturned the tentative recovery which had been evident in the first quarter of the year, and left the cumulative figure for the year anchored 1.6% below the 2009 level.

AEA's airline-by-airline figures show the disparity between the impacts of airspace closures on individual airlines. Only four member airlines recorded a growth in April – all in southern and eastern Europe, while nine reported traffic losses in excess of 20%.

Indications for May, based on weekly traffic figures, show an improved outlook. A further round of ash-induced disruptions in the early part of the month continued to impact the market, but the last three weeks of the month showed traffic increasing in the 6%-8% range.

Note to the Editor: The Association of European Airlines (AEA) brings together 36 European established scheduled network carriers. These collectively carry 347 million passengers and 6 million tonnes of cargo each year, operating 2,160 aircraft serving 662 destinations in 162 countries with 11,400 flights a day. They provide around 385,000 jobs directly, and generate a total turnover of €70 billion
